COMPREHENSION

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

Marvel, the eagle, had grown old and his beak and claws had become blunt. He could not hunt as he did earlier. If he didn't find food soon, he would starve to death. He knew there was one way to live longer, but it was a very difficult and painful task. He had to find a high mountain somewhere, where he could live safely for a few months without being troubled by other birds and beasts of prey. He had to give up his claws and his beak by hammering them against the rocks. Only after he had taken them out would a new beak and claws grow in their place. It was really a terrible thing and needed a lot of courage. Marvel flew to a high and rocky mountain. It was lonely and he could be attacked by any other creature, because he had no way of protecting himself. But he spent months there, in pain and all alone. And one day, when he had grown back his powerful beak and claws, he spread his mighty wings and flew off the mountain top. He was ready for hunting!
